that which I cannot do,
in order that I may
learn how to do it."

-Pablo Picasso

With pencil it is sketched, with pen it is drawn, with paint it is illustrated. Various mediums calling attention with their colors and textures. Each with a different purpose but used to illustrate a single subject; Figures.

A depiction of emotion translated in the movements of limbs eyes gleaming, a gentle whisper of a soul living within the frame.

It's the depiction of people, a subject that once was daring to even sketch, is now the focal point of my artistic curiosity. There is something almost immortal about capturing a person in a sketch and it withstands a lifetime. The first time I even attempted to capture the life of a person was that of myself. Self-Portraits express growth overtime, like photographs, but there are marks not seen within these photographs. The perspective and humanity of the artists mind leaks through. This is what my art means to explore.
